Winter Depot

Konstnärskollektivet Tenthaus bjuder in till att se resultatet av ett moment av förtroende mellan Göteborgsbaserade konstnärer och människor som lär sig svenska på Hermods AB i Mölndalsvägen. Lokala konstnärer blev ombudda att personligen leverera verken till Galleri Box. Där, väntade en språkklass, varje student parades i hop med en konstnär för att packa upp och installera verket.

Tenthaus artist collective would like you to come and see the results of a moment of trust between Gothenburg's visual artists and people learning Swedish at «SFI» language school. Local artists have been asked to personally deliver their works to Galleri Box. There, a language class awaits, each student paired up with an artist to unpack and install the art.

Tenthaus Winter Depot mimics the storage space of a larger museum, the shelving units dominate the space. In a depot, material is received, classified, stored, accounted for, issued, maintained, procured, manufactured, assembled, researched, salvaged and disposed of. This notion suggests both transition and storage, where the given perimeters for exhibiting these smaller scale art works are not ones that optimize the works on show, but present the potential of each piece.

Tenthaus Winter Depot aims to create a different kind of meeting between artist and public outside the set prescription of exhibition opening or artist talk. Tenthaus Oslo artist collective opens up for dialogue in another zone, one outside exhibition conventions where the artist hands over her work to a non-expert, not necessarily with an arts background. They are intrigued and excited about the possibilities that this scenario will throw back at them. What can happen when two strangers engage in this project? What will these meetings reveal about the gallery format and the differing roles that these newly formed constellations? How will the set structure of the shelves affect installation when relating to art practice? What will the theme of the conversations be?

The shelving units, were originally part of an artwork by Stefan Schröder entitled Archive, my thoughts, your actions (2013) exhibited at the Vigeland Museum as part of the Norwegian Sculpture Biennial. In 2015, Tenthaus Oslo commissioned Rachel Dagnell to curate Spring Depot an exhibition that filled the shelves with works by artists working locally in Oslo. The concept has now been redeveloped to include Winter Depot at Galleri Box (2018) and Spring Depot 2018 at Tenthaus Oslo.

Bearing Witness

January 18, 2018

As you hold this leaflet in your hand, I expect you have an understanding and an interest in what is happening in Gallery Box. Winter Depot is now a series of inanimate objects but I would like you to imagine this space filled with intense meetings, dialogues, and new understandings between artists, and migrants learning Swedish and culture at Hermods School.

This morning we, that is Tenthaus Artist Collective, held a session or workshop which you most probably haven't experienced first-hand. We finished the session a couple of hours ago and now the rooms in Gallery Box feel both empty and full. It's so quiet, I can hear the others moving around and typing on their computers. We are working – thinking – pushing ourselves to present Winter Depot tomorrow evening. The quietness is enlightening, and I sit trying to write backstage at Gallery Box.

How do I describe what happened, between 8.45 and 11.30 am, this morning? We anticipated a chaotic situation for both the students and artists. Would the students get bored? Would the artists engage with the students? However, as the session drew to a close, a feeling of elation spread.

The session had been a success. As we later shared observations and experiences, we uncovered countless situations where students led the initiative to discuss the works through their perspectives. Furthermore, I noticed students were micro-moving the objects in relation to each other. An understanding that was not spoken about in any way but an action showing the aesthetic understanding of the significance of the object that needed to be “just a certain way.”

One student took the curatorial mandate and created a situation beyond our expectations.

Kristina (artist) arrived and was introduced to a group of men who were keen to see what she would show them. She had a rucksack clinging to her back and seemed content to chat and get to know her group but one of the men, Basel (student), seemed impatient and he helped remove her backpack. She opened it and gave him a painting wrapped in a stripped cloth.

Basel removed the cloth and looked at the painting; he asked Kristina about its meaning. A smile of appreciation spread over his face; he liked it. He seemed energized by it. It was quite a difficult abstract painting to understand but her explanation was fairly straight forward.

it was a painting with sky that I found in a second-hand store – I decided to paint more sky on it so it was only sky – I was living in a flat with few windows at the time and I used it as a window.

Basel jokes about something and quickly moves across the room to deposit the picture on a shelf – he turns around shouting – what about this then. He’s waving the cloth. No! comes a male voice back. No – perhaps not - Kristina says.

He has something in mind and decides to try it out. He arranges the cloth in a particular way and puts the painting on it. I am impressed and daren’t say a word in case I interrupt the moment. Kristina comes forward, a little uncertain, and decides that perhaps it’s ok. Perhaps, he has a point; this is an installation. Kristina allows the work to stay and after a while seems pleased with the result. This is a game she is happy to play, she is open to shift. Basel looks round, a little insecure, but is met with smiles and acknowledgement - that art can work like that too.

Winter Depot was a catalyst for conversations and actions that brought people closer to each other, created an understanding and gave students and artists the chance to experience the viewing of art in a new way.

before this project, I was only interested in classical art. I really love that and contemporary art was something that I found uninteresting but now I think that I could really get into enjoying it more. (student)

I have rarely been so warmly welcomed as an artist – they are so interested in the work. (artist)

We overheard dialogues that widened the narrow field of our understanding, throwing forward new questions and creating new potentials. In Winter Depot, we question the accessibility of understanding art from a non-expert perspective, the view of the uninitiated. However, we must also ask the hard question - Does the art scene want to be more accessible? The scenario displayed in here suggests so.

This tiny workshop format, of introducing new-comers to art, will prove its value in time and we justify it through the idea that everybody should be able to engage in contemporary culture. Listen to the room and let it tell you of the moments of trust between artist and the non-expert as the objects were installed. The Tenthaus Artist Collective is privileged to have witnessed some of these moments.

We thank you all – artists, students, teachers and Box for making this happen.

Om Rigmor Dahlqvist, Flickan och soffan

Kanske soffan är flickans tillflyktsort. Färgerna ger oss ett sorgligt intryck. Vi vet att hon är ledsen och ensam från hennes kroppsspråk. Jag tror att träsoffan inte är bekväm och att det är svårt att sitta där och läsa. Varför sitter hon i hörnet?

Hon ser ledsen ut.

Om Jaqueline Forzelius, 1:12 Modell av Anders Breviks rum
från 2006-2011

Det känns dåligt och det finns inget liv i rummet. Rummet ser tråkigt ut och han vill inte stanna där. Han hade inte särskilt intresse för sitt rum.

Vad används för att göra den modellen?

Vad är viktigt med att göra mördares rum?

När jag tittar på bilden, tänker jag på en dålig man som mördade flera människor.

(Elevkommentar)

Om Miriam Colombine, Jag lovar att vi alla växte upp i samma hus

Alla lever i samma samhälle. Men livet går upp och ner. Det är inte lätt för människor att studera livet varje dag.

*Vi undrar om "samma hus" betyder "världen"?
Betyder de där taggarna miljö. Kanske den här konsten betyder miljö och vi behöver det för att leva, men om vi använder för mycket kan det skada oss.*
